Committee members said that contributions by private individuals and corporations in the United States may violate the Neutrality Act, which bars private support or participation in military expeditions against governments that are at peace with the United States.

U.S. officials said that there have been no such diversions and that the countries have beloed the rebels with their own money because they have an interest in combating Communism and, in the case of Israel and Taiwan, hope to expand markets for their products. Outside aid to the rebels became focus of attention after two U.S. citizens were killed Sept. 1 when their helicopter was shot down during a rebel raid on a military training school in Santa Clara, Nicaragua, near the Honduran border. The two Americans, Dana H. Parker Jr., from Huntsville, Alabama, and James Powell 3rd, from Memphis, Tennessee, were members of an Alabama-based veterans' group called Civilian Military Assistance that has provided advice and military equipment to the Nicaraguan rebels and El Salvador's armed forces, according to group members and U.S. officials.

Officials said Friday that four Cuban military advisers were killed in the attack and that the school served as a base for Cubans and Libyans. Nicaragua said the only people killed were three children and a cook and that there were no Cubans or Libyans at the site.

The administration has denied any link with the attack or with the rticipation of the Americans.

Mr. Calero and other rebel leaders said that much of the private money raised to the United States has been channeled to the insurgents through the Human Develop-ment Foundation Inc., to Miami.

The foundation has solicited donations in newspaper advertisevertisement in The New York Times this summer said, "The Vic-tims of Communist Dominated Nicaragna Need Your Help." It appealed for contributions to aid "200,000 Nicaraguans" who "have fled their country to escape the ruthless Sandinista regime."

French Seek to Mitigate Mitterrand's Setback on Morocco-Libya Merger

The union of the radical and the conservative Arab states shocked France, which has taken care to cultivate its political and historic ties with North Africa. King Hassan II of Morocco has long been regarded by Paris as a staunch ally, the reverse of Colonel Moamer Qadhafi, the Libyan leader.

Peres Faces Labor Revolt On Cabinet

TEL AVIV - Prime Ministerdesignate Shimon Peres faced a possible rebellion within his Labor alignment over a national unity government on Sunday, raising doubts that it would be set up as planned this week.

"Everything is more or less open," said Gad Yaacobi, a senior Labor legislator who helped negoti-ate the plan for a bipartisan cabinet with the Likud bloc of the caretaker prime minister, Yitzhak Shamir. The 1,200-member central committee of the Labor Party is scheduled to vote Monday on the unity accord. Israel Radio's political correspondent said doubts were mounting that the agreement would be approved.

Speaking on the state-owned ra-dio, Mr. Yaacohi said there was dissatisfaction over Mr. Peres's decision to bow in Mr. Shamir's demand that key economie cabinet posts go to Likud ministers, including Ariel Sharon, Mr. Sharon, forced to resign as defense chief last year after an investigation found him indirectly responsible for the massacre of hundreds of Palestinian refugees in Beirut in September 1982, has been selected for the trade and industry

Under the unity accord, Mr. Peres will serve as prime minister until 1986, when Mr. Shamir takes over. Labor will bold the defense portfolio for the duration of the overnment's 50-month term while Likud will name a finance minister. The power-sharing agreement followed the inconclusive July 23 elections in which neither major party won enough seats for a par-amentary majority. Mr. Yaacobi said "not a few" central committee members condered the accord "so problematic that it should oot be ratified." The Jerusalem Post reported that up to 35 percent of the group could vote against the agreement. It said members were inceused over the reinstatement of Mr. Sharon to a position of influence.

"Everyone knows we went to new elections in order to save the economy, to change direction," Mr. Yaacobi said. "And now we find ourselves in a situation in which the Labor Party will play a minor

Inflation in Israel is running at an annual rate of 400 percent, and foreign currency reserves have dwindled to $2.4 billion.

On Saturday, Mr. Peres said be hoped to overcome opposition within his party and ask the Knesset, or parliament, to approve the new government of 22 to 24 ministers on Wednesday. Eliahu Ben-Elissar, a senior Likud legislator, said he was certain that Mr. Shamir's Herut Party, the largest in the Likud bloc, would approve the unity pact.

the implications of the merger for the balance of power between Morocco and Algeria, which are vying for control of the Moroccan-ruled territory of Western Sahara.

It is widely believed here that King Hassan's primary purpose in seeking an alliance with Libya was to strengthen his hand in his 10year guerrilla war in Western Saha-ra with the Algerian-backed Polisario Front. The treaty presumably means that Libya, which supported Polisario until last year, will now assist Morocco.

After refusing in discuss Mr. Mitterrand's visits in Morocco on the grounds that they were strictly private, French officials are now busily denying rumors that they foreshadow any change in France's traditionally even-handed approach in its two former North African colonies.

Claude Cheysson, the minister for external affairs, who was dis-patched to Algiers in an attempt to appease an angry President Chadli Senjedid, insisted in a radio interview Thursday that the idea of a private visit by Mr. Mitterrand to Moroeco had originally been broached in January 1983.

Mr. Cheysson said that the decision in go ahead with the visit, despite the controversial treaty, was made to avoid a crisis in France's relations with Morocco.

Despite some politicians' ing of voters as they leave the polls, exit poll may have enough staying power to make it into the dictionary, Mr. Lowe said. He is less sure about yuppie (short for young urban profes-sional or young urban preppie) and yumpie (young upwardly mobile professional).

Foreign Engineers Staying On in U.S.

President Reagan's announcement last month that he would nominate Nam Pyo Sub as assistant director for engi-neering at the National Science Foundation pointed up the increasingly important role that foreign-born engineers are playing in the United States.

Mr. Suh is a professor of mechanical engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge. A native of Korea, he emigrated to the United States as a teenager in 1954, earned college and graduate degrees and became a citizen in 1963. He is one of thousands of foreign-born engi-neers and scientists who come to the United States to study and stay on to teach and work.

"One view fears that these foreign students are going to get the jobs that Americans should get." says Charles Falk of the science foundation. "The other says that it's all great — we are the training ground of the world, and it's very good diplomacy to train people and exture."

The foundation says that for-cigners earn well over half of all U.S. graduate degrees in engineering. They also form a large share of graduate enrollments in other disciplines: 37 percent of the graduate students in mathematics and computer sci-cuce courses in 1983, 31 percent in the physical sciences, 21 percent in the social sciences, 15 percent in the life sciences and 12 percent in environmental

Smokey's Message May Be 'Let It Burn'

Smokey Bear, the U.S. Forest Service advertising mascot who tells people that only they can prevent forest fires, may be overdoing it, according to an increasing number of professionals within the service itself.

They propose that some nat-ural fires, specifically those started by lightning, be allowed even suggest that forest rangers deliberately set some fires to prevent dense growth such as that which fueled the recent huge fires in Montana. This latter idea is included in a new fire policy set forth in the Federal Register this summer and now moving through the regulatory process.

"The service has been following this Smokey Bear stuff for 40 years," said Danny Hart, district ranger at the Helena National Forest in Montana, which lost 28,000 acres last month. "But when you go out and fight every line, you get a tremendous buildup of growth in the forest. Then when this fire came along, all that dense fuel was just waiting and away she went, way out of control."

E.M. Stiger, a Forest Service ecologist, agreed that "fire is a fundamental part of the forest ecosystem." But the consensus is that Smokey Bear's central fire prevention message is still valid. As Mr. Hart put it, "We don't want people to think they're doing us a favor when they leave the campfire burn-

Violence in Movies: A Broken Record

The National Coalition on Television Violence, a research group that also monitors films. says the motion picture "Red Dawn" contains an average of 134 acts of violence per hour more than any movie it has

The coalition said "Red Dawn," which depicts guerrilla warfare between U.S. high school students and Communist invaders, "promotes in-tense hatred and open warfare against Russia, Cuba and Nicaragua." A spokesman for MGM-United Artists said, "It is not a political film. It is an entertainment film."

In addition to "Red Dawn," the coalition placed five other recent films in its "X-Unfit" category: "Friday the 13th: Fi-nal Chapter," "Dreamscape," "Once Upon a Time in Ameri-ca," "Alphabet City" and "The Initiation."

Teamwork in Jerusalem

The stalemate brought about by the inconclusive Israeli elections of July 23 has been broken, finally, by an agreement between the two major parties to share power in a so-called national unity government. A new government could be in place in a week. It sounds crazy that Labor and the outgoing Likud, so long at war, could agree to trade off the prime ministership (first Labor's Shimon Peres, then the Likud incumbent, Yitzhak Shamir) after two years, divide the ministries and otherwise suspend bloodletting. Lack of an acceptable alternative produced the bizarre structure with which Israelis will experiment now.

The rationale is hope that the new dispensation will allow the small parties, which demand exorbitant political payoffs for participating in a government with one or the other large party, to be trimmed to size. It may even permit electoral reform that reduces the weight of those small parties permanently.

Meanwhile, or so optimists suggest, Labor and Likud working together will be better able than either governing alone to impose the severe austerity that everyone agrees — in principle - is essential to tame the country's galloping economic crisis. In principle? The timid governments and ardent consumers familiar in Israel do not build confidence in its capacity to slay the monster of indexation, which currently protects most citizens' standard of living, or to shrink the subsidies that ensure the inefficiency of many enterprises.

In foreign policy, a national unity government may institutionalize bipartisanship - or inertia. During the campaign, some of the sharper edges were filed off the two parties' formal disagreements. There may be a working consensus now, for instance, to continue but to cut back on new West Bank settlements. On negotiations, Labor's and Likud's differing tendencies are rendered somewhat academic by King Hussein's hesitancy, the PLO's fragmentation and the West Bankers' confusion; currently there is no Arab negotiating partner. On Lebanon, continuing casualties long ago forged a common interest in ending the Israeli occupation as soon as some workable combination of Lebanese and United Nations forces can be put together on the ground.

In this American election season there is no impulse in the United States to disrupt relations with Israel. The Reagan administration has taken the occasion of the Arab-Israeli diplomatic lull to work up plans to help Israel put its economy on a steadier fonting. This is worth doing if it involves more than pouring in extra subsidies, enabling Israel to avoid its own hard choices and adding an extra and unneeded level of concern to a U.S.-Israeli relationship that is difficult enough to manage as it is. Sooner or later, however, America is going to have to get back to the Israeli-Pales-tinian question, which is in partial eclipse at the moment but still alive and unresolved.

— THE WASHINGTON POST.

Democracy Is Tolerance

President Reagan said at a prayer breakfast in Dallas last mooth: People who resist the imposition of prayer in public schools are "attacking religion" and frustrating the will "of the great majority of Americans."

He told a B'nai B'rith convention in Washington last week; The Constitution "makes sure that every single American is free to choose and practice his or her religious beliefs or to choose no religion at all. Their rights shall not be questioned or violated by the state."

There is a contradiction here, evident to those who choose no religion at all, plus many Catholics, Jews, Protestants and others. What would Mr. Reagan advise them to do when their children are ridiculed for not participating in "voluntary" school prayers? Does he, truly, think they are free to go out and resist such religious practice? Or does he think, as he said in Dallas, that if they do resist it is they who are guilty of intolerance?

Intolerance: That is the word that burns beneath all the smoke about religion and politics, a coupling that offends neither church oor state. There is plenty of religion in politics and ought to be. People in a democracy should act on their social values, whether derived from religious faith or secular sources.

Churches have long preached the social gospel. They have been prominent in the civil rights movement, in the Vietnam resistance, in anti-nuclear campaigns, even in partisan cam-paigns like the Reverend Jesse Jackson's run for the Democratic presidential nomination. It is no offense to the Constitution that, in place of the social gospel, other churches now preach social Darwinism or inveigh on behalf of spending billions for new weapons and against spending any federal dollars for aboroh so sure they're right, who insist that they spirit that's oot too sure it's right." alone represent the one true political faith, who revile the other side as godless, intolerant obstructionists. President Reagan has come close to expressing just such certified.

He did seem to moderate his views on Thursday before the B'nai B'rith, but just two days before, speaking to the American Legion, he was still dividing the world into children of light and children of darkness; "What some would do is to twist the concept of freedom of religion to mean 'freedom against religion.'

Religionists have every right to lobby for causes, to run for office, to criticize with vehemence - but not to misrepresent their opponents or ridicule their motives. Indeed, these rights carry with them a responsibility to respect other views. In short, tolerance; the vital insulator of democracy, the cushion that soft-ens the sharp collisions between different views and faiths and enables all Americans to live together in reasonable harmony.

Mr. A may strongly support capital punishment yet feel passionately that abortion is murder. Mrs. B may disagree with equal passion on both counts and demand of Mr. A. "Death is death. Why can't you see the incon-sistency in your positions?" There are times when devout practitioners of one creed, although completely sure they are right, coo-front equally tenacious believers of the opposite. In this free society, the practical, not to mention moral, mechanism is tolerance.

Did it ever occur to the president that opponents of school prayer might have worthy motives and are not out to frustrate "the great majority"? Or that they might be right? And even if not, did it ever occur to him that their views deserve their president's respect? That would be tolerance. Or, as Learned Hand, the legendary jurist, said during the dark days of World War II: "The spirit of liber

Reagan on Nuclear Weapons

President Reagan's promise to try to "eliminate" ouclear weapons in a second term is not to be taken too seriously. There is little prospect of it happening. And, noble a sentiment as it sounds, it is not an entirely sensible objective. The temptation for either superpower to make a pre-emptive strike in some other technology - laser, chemical or biological weapons - would be increased, and the world might be a more rather than a less dangerous place. Nonetheless there is enormous scope for a cut in ouclear arsenals while retaining the halance of terror.

Helping Latin America Cope

Latin America is hanging on. Although there was a one-day general strike in Argentina on Sept. 3, and two days of disorder in Chile, there is still little sign of a much-feared general political explosion throughout Latin America. High unemployment and sharp cuts in real wages because of the region's foreign debt crisis continue. But the end is not nigh. Latin America's democracies are mostly improving their economie performance at great social and political cost and by squeezing their imports (although some countries are starting to increase their imports again). Argentina remains the chief exception to this improving trend. Talk of a debtors' cartel is receding. Bankers have been encouraged to think of multi-year rescheduling of debts from Mexico, Brazil and possibly Venezuela. Interest [is] being trim-med. The United States and Britain are holding back from multi-year rescheduling of government debts. Do not fellow democracies south of the Rio Grande deserve a better deal? - The Economist (London).

PARIS — After a steadily-progressing illness, Mr. Edward H. Harriman died [on Sept. 9] at his home at Arden, near Tuxedo, New York. The whole nation, and even the whole world, has had its attention daily directed anew towards the achievements, the wealth and the power of this man whose career was one of the most amazing in the history of American business. The son of a poor clergyman, Mr. Harriman went while yet a boy into Wall Street to make his fortune. He prospered, but was past forty years of age before his name became known outside of his own business circle. Then his famous reorganization of the Chicago and Alton Railroad revealed a new financier, as his rebuilding of the Union and Central Pacific revealed a new genius in railroading.

Only a Supranational Agency Can Bring Security

T HE HAGUE — An important element of today's international situation is the uncertainty that each superpower feels about the real policy aims of the other: Are they compatible with the slogans it uses to motivate its soldiers (patriotism or democracy), or does each side aim to propagate its social order?

We may recall the historic role of patriotism: As long as it is defensive on both sides, no harm can be done, but this is not so when we claim that the best defense is attack.

Suppose we assumed that what was really at stake was the social order: One aim of the Soviet Union's international policy is to spread the com-munist order, and a U.S. policy aim is to maintain the capitalist order. But both formulations are inexact.

The Soviet order is not completely communist. Private enterprise is maintained in some sectors; farmers can expend part of their labor on private plots of land; some personal services can be supplied privately. In and they are now close to the top of economic performance. Half a centu-ry ago few if any Western "experts" on Japan anticipated that develop-ment. This should be a moderating consideration when opinions on developing countries are formulated.

In several respects Japanese society shows socialist features. Income inequality is considerably less than in the United States; industrial democracy is more developed than in America or most of Europe.

One of the important contributions to the discussion on socialism was Karl Marx's preference for a scientific approach to the study of social develoment. But scientific thinking itself develops, shifting continually as a consequence of new facts and in-sights derived from scientific research. We should not stick to scientific knowledge as it was in 1850, but apply current thinking. Adhering to ideas of 1850 would oot be scientific.

Two important facts that were un-known to Marx or Lenin are the production of nuclear energy and pollu-tion of the environment. Both are of primordial importance to our future. Nuclear war or large-scale pollution could mean an end to human life on Earth. Thus, a new priority has developed as a precondition to changing the social order — that neither a nuclear war nor intensive pollution, such as acid rain or other intoxication of our environment, should interfere with socioeconomic policies.

The prevention of these disasters sets some limits on what instruments of socioeconomic policy can be ap-plied. Expressed more positively, the prevention of these disasters requires the creation of institutions, as cloments of our socioeconomic order, of ranational character.

The clearest modern example is the prevention of pollution. This can be organized only by an agency of supranational character deciding on the use or non-use of certain types of fuel and vested with the policing power occeded to enforce such decisions. Most of the present forms of international cooperation - treaties between sovereign states — do not guarantee the execution of decisions.

The need to create supranational agencies is an extremely important message to politicians that must be addressed first of all to the superpow-ers. It should also be the subject of thorough analysis by scientists. It has been applied in only a few cases because the opposite idea, national sov-ereignty, has enormous, although irrational, appeal. The most interesting supranational agency was the Euro-pean Coal and Steel Community, Another important example would be the proposed supranational authority under the new law of the sea. The unavoidable conclusion is that world security is a subject that can be dealt with scriously only by a supra-national agency. Its importance is such that negotiations on the scale of those on the law of the sea are fully justified. This, then, is the challenge to a solotion of the East-West issue.

Will the superpowers be able joint-by to create such a supranational agency? Can the UN Security Coun-cil be so reorganized as to become a truly supranational agency — with-out veto power for each member, and with a world peace force?

To those who reject such an instru-ment as unrealistic — as an overwhelming majority of politicians probably will —the question must be posed: Can you formulate an alternative to attain real security?

The Issue In America Is Reagan

By James Reston

WASHINGTON — The longer this American election campain goes on, the more apparent it is that Ronald Reagan is the main issue. The Republicans are counting on into win in November, The Democrats are divided on the prudence of at-tacking the president personally, but Walter Mondale is gradually coming to the view that the president's competence and theatrical illusions must be brought under sharper scrutiny.

Mr. Reagan is vulnerable on at least four basic questions: his ability to get the nuclear arms race and the budget delicits under control, his partiality toward the rich and his determination to appoint friends and ideological conservatives to key excoutive and judicial positions.

He has recently been speaking more about peace and arms control but his relations with the Russians have deteriorated so far in three years that his chances of relieving the mclear menace are questionable at best.

Mr. Mondale has raised the arms and debt issues but has not brought them down to the harsh reality they deserve. The facts are clear enough: While Mr. Reagan tours America talking about how much stronger and safer it is than in 1980, the truth is that every day the Soviet Union now produces three and a half new nuclear weapons, the United States pro-duces one and a half new nuclear weapons and the interest on the present U.S. debt alone now costs the nation $300 million more every day,

"You ain't seen nothing yet," he proclaimed in his Labor Day speech What we "ain't seen" is the consequences of these alarming statistics or of the Supreme Court and other appointments be is likely to make if he is re-elected for another four years. What we have seen is a series of one-act plays or vandeville acts by an accomplished actor.

The other day, Hugh Sidey of Time magazine asked the president: What about a poverty-ridden young black in a ghetto with no father, no money, no education, no hope?

Mr. Reagan replied: "I know this is oversimplification, but it's the only way to answer the question, Basically the Democratic Party has said, We'll take care of you. We'll see you have food and shelter.' But then what is he? He is as beholden to that government institution as he was beholden in slavery to the fellow who lived in the big house on the hill. Our party is saying to them: "We want equality of opportunity. The only barrier will be ithin yourself as to your own ability to achieve your dreams ... One day the president talks in this vein and the next day he says that our lives are here to serve others and to make a better world for others," One day he denounces the Soviet leaders as cunning men who preside.

over an "evil empire" and will be or cheat or do anything else to achieve their objectives of world domination And he is then surprised when the Russians ignore his hopes for banishing all ouclear weapons from the world, if not from outer space. There is no coherence to this jumhle of good intentions and dreamy prospects. He talks personally about reducing the influence of government on personal life, but he wants organized prayer in the public schools and federal funds for parochial schools.

He opposes abortion, budget deficits and the Equal Rights Amendment for women, but he presides over the largest deficit in history. All this while calling for a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced budget, and demanding that Congress enhance his power to veto any item in any bill passed by Congress.
It is no wonder that a candidate with such a riot of policies should be the main issue in the election campaign. The wonder is that Mr. Mondale has been so ineffective in campaigning against him, and that the president, at his age, promising more of the same, should still be so far ahead in the popularity polls.

Will this change in the next two months? Not unless reading and thinking suddenly become popular. It is permitted to criticize all candidates, but not to criticize the voters. It is assumed that they are studying the issues rather than the personal ities involved, but there is little evidence to support this assumption.

What we are seeing so far in this campaign is a triumph of personality over policy, of political television advertising over substance and of wishes over realities. But you can't blame Mr. Reagan entirely for all this. He does not deny the facts of the arms race or the deficits. He jokes about his age and bombing the Russians, and adds, "You ain't seen nothing yet." On this point, he is probably right, but nobody quite knows whether this is a promise or a threat.

Parallel Nuclear Tracks

"Are we willing," John Anderson asks m "Halt This Action-Reaction Nuclear Race" (Aug. 29), "to be students of history or are we simply going to relive our past mistakes?"
I would respond that Mr. Anderson himself has not studied the history of nuclear deployments very carefully.

The notion of a strict action-reaction cycle of arms buildups does not hold water. The Russians exploded their first atom bomb only four years after Hiroshima. While it may be that Stalin intensified his program after the disclosures of U.S. explosions, there can be no doubt that the Soviets were working on nuclear weapons development almost as early as America. Both sides got wind of the technology from German scientists. The move from atom to hydrogen bombs was a logical, if unwelcome, technical step for both sides. The Russian cruise missile program dates from the 1950s and was not spanied by the U.S. program of the 1970s, as Mr. Anderson asserts. Even the off-cited example of MIRV deployment is misleading. Despite Moscow's pro-fessed wish to halt a technology in which America had the lead, it had; been vigorously pursuing its own MIRV program since the early 1960s.

As for strategic defense, the Russians have long considered it in the words of analyst Michael J. Desne, "an essential integral element of their military force structure." Soviet out lays on strategic defense increased from five times U.S. outlays in to 25 times the U.S. figure in In and they continue to rise, despite the ABM treaty. The simple fact is the the Russians have proceeded to velop their technology even ! there has been no concurrent program to spur them on.

U.S. Borrowers Return As Summer Lull Ends

By CARL GEWIRTZ

ARIS — The summer hall in the Eurobond market ended with a bang last week, with U.S. companies alone offering a face amount of $1.35 billion worth of new issues. In addition, foreign borrowers launched offers worth $760 million and the equivalent of another $530 million in paper denominated in other currencies.

The feature of the week was the return en masse of U.S. borrowers, who have largely refrained from tapping the market pending clarification of the details concerning the midsummer

The initial thinking about these moves was that they would cause the international dollar bond market for U.S. issuers to move to New York, allowing U.S. investment banks to reassert their primacy over managing new issues. But events have clearly demonstrated that, as the U.S. regulations implementing the tax repeal now stand, the Eurobond market has lost none of its competitive there is a desire or need to reach a wider audience of investors. And European investment banks, such as Credit Suisse First Boston, which monopolized last week's activity as lead manager, remain able to bid for new business.

This is due to the fact that a big portion of the pool of European investors want bond holdings not only tax free but also anonymous in the form of bearer instruments. While domestic bonds of U.S. companies can now be sold tax free, they are offered only in registered form.

HE initial boom in activity last week was triggered by the relative paneity recently of new U.S. paper. This allowed international Business Machines to raise money at a cost including commissions, of 93 basis points — virtually a full percentage point — below what it would have had to pay in New York. A basis point is one-hundredth of a percentage point. The three-year notes, carrying a coupon of 11% percent and priced at a discount of 99% to yield 11.85 percent, were an instant success and the amount of the issue was doubled to $200 million.

By late week, a rally in the U.S. bond market, fed by an unexpected $700-million decline in M-1, the narrowest measure of the U.S. money supply, and Federal Reserve action adding cash to the market, triggered a new wave of activity.

AUSTRALIA

PARIS - The gradual merging of the syndicated-loan market with the international bond market ran into trouble last week when some major banks balked at the substan-tial cuts they were being asked to accept in their lending charges.

The showdown involved the relinancing by Britoil of a $400-mil-lion syndicated loan arranged in

SYNDICATED LOANS

1982. Interest on that eight-year loan had been set at 1/2 point over the London interbank offered rate for the first four years, rising to % point after that, or 1/2 point over the prime rate of U.S. banks for the first four years, rising to 4 point over thereafter.

Britoil is repaying $100 million of that loan and Citicorp, lead manager of the original transaction, is attempting to restructure the remaining $300 million as a backup line for the issuance of short-term commercial paper. The aim of the operation is to significantly reduce Britail's cost of borrowed funds over the six-year life of the new agreement to less than % point over Libor per year. A tender panel of 15 banks would be set up to bid for the short-term notes, which the banks could then either keep on their own books or resell to insotutional investors. There are no restrictions on the bidding: Each panel member could bid whatever it wanted and Britoil would have the option to accept or reject the terms.

Britoil's fallback, if the terms bid for the commercial paper were unattractive, would be to draw on the standby credit. The banks would carn an annual facility fee of % percent, or 12½ basis points, for holding this credit in readiness. But this fee could be cut to a thin 10 basis points if $150 million or more

The charge to use the credit is scaled to the amount drawn. On a borrowing from the banks of up to $100 million. Britoil would pay 10 basis points plus the 1/2-percent fa-cility fee — giving lenders a return of 22½ basis points. The basic lending charge rises five basis points for each additional $100 million Assuming all $300 million were taken from the banks, the base charge would be 20 basis points over Libor plus the reduced facility fee of 10 basis points. Reliable sources report that this was deemed too low and that four of the nine original managers Manufacturers Hanover Trust, National Westminster, RepublicBank of Dallas and Security Pacific — have dropped out of the project.

The Industrial Bank of Japan has been invited into the deal in the hope of stirring interest among Japanese lenders, and invitations have gone out to other banks to join the management group.

What critics object to is the fact that drawings on the backup credit are not more remunerative. They argue that the implication of Britoil's being unable to market commercial paper at terms it finds acceptable is that it will have run into some kind of difficulty and the cost of drawing on the bank credit should reflect that presumed state

Mexico Unveils Debt Pact

Foreign Banks To Weigh Plan

By William J. Orme Washington Post Service
MEXICO CITY — Mexico has won an agreement in principle from foreign banks to reschedule payments of $48.5 billion in gov-ernment debts over the next 14 years, Finance Minister Jesús Silva

At a news conference Friday, he noted that the agreement "breaks with orthodoxy to a considerable extent" in its stretched-out amortization plan and in its technical mechanisms designed to reduce interest rates.

The rescheduling was negotiated with a 13-bank steering committee representing Mexico's biggest private creditors. It still must be approved by the more than 500 for-proved by the more than 500 for-eign commercial banks owed money by Mexico.

Tha package covers virtually "everything that is restructurable" in the Mexican public-sector debt, including $20 billion due between 1985 and 1990, $23 billion that had already been restructured and $5 billion in 1983 loans.

Instead of the huge $10-billion payments due next year, Mexico will pay $250 million, and no payment over $3 billion will be due until after 1988.

In addition, interest on $43 bil-

in addition, interest on $43 billion of the $48.5 billion, pegged at the U.S. prime rate, will be exchanged for the London interbank offered rate, which historically has been slightly lower.

This will save Mexico nearly $1 hillion in the next two years and about $350 million annually thereafter, Mexican officials calculate. The terms set a precedent and will strengthen the bargaining posi-tion of other large Latin American debtors, Mr. Silva Herzog said.

While acknowledging that Mexico anticipates some resistance, especially from smaller banks in-volved primarily in short-term trade financing in Mexico, Mr. Silva Herzog expressed confidence that the transaction will be concluded within a year.

A novel aspect of the proposed agreement is a provision permitting creditors to review Mexico's economic progress through government financial documents and the reports it presents annually to the International Monetary Fund.

While the banks would have pre-ferred to supervise Mexico's economic development, the new arrangement would still allow bankers to suspend the restructuring accord if they believed the country to be heading anew toward "disastrous" economic circumof the backup credit is actually stances, Mr. Silva Herzog said.

The significance of this shift in currency composition is that it could have an impact on the foreign exchange market. The dollar has been pushed to record-high levels because demand exceeds supply by a wide margin. An important part of this demand is a preference by private foreign investors to hold dollar assets. But in all, net foreign purchases of U.S. securities last year totaled only $10 billion, a mere 25 percent of the outflow of dollars from the United States as measured by its current account delicit.

One possible explanation for why dollars are so sought after internationally despite the record outflow from the United States is that non-U.S. banks that have borrowed dollars in the Euromarket to lend in Latin America are in a cash chind. These loans are not being repaid: the interest income that theoretically is being kept current is actually relent as "involuntary" new loans and the expected principal repayments have been resched-uled for many years later.

FALSE DAWN: Women in the Age of the Sun King

By Louis Auchincloss. 184 pp. $14.95. Doubleday, 245 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10167.

Reviewed by Audrey C. Foote

THE effulgent epoch of the Sun King.
Louis XIV, was surely the high noon of the French monarchy: many historians regard his reign as the meridian of French culture. For the women of France, and much of Europe, the era was rather a sunrise, and a brief one, according to Louis Auchincloss in this pleasant collection of linked essays designed for the amateur of history rather than the scholar While he may have called it "False Dawn" partly as a salute to his revered biographee Edith Wharton (it's the name of one of her novellas), this title does announce his initial thesis: that women then had unprecedented opportunities for influence, independence and even anthority, unequaled until the 20th centu-

"Madame de Sévigné," "Mary of Modena,"
"The Duchess of Marlborough," "Queen Christina" — a glance at the contents page suggests that the subtitle may be misleading since the chapters are character sketches not only of French women but English, Swedish, German and Italian as well; furthermore, nationality is often confused by foreign marriages or careers. The French-born Princesse des Ur sins, for example, married an Italian noblem and later became adviser to the young queen of Spain. Nevertheless, with the partial exception of Queen Christina and Sophia of Hanover, all ese women were deeply affected, their lives largely determined, by Louis XIV in his various roles as cousin, lover, busband, patron, ally or enemy. The active life spans of these ladies, moreover, and the major events in which they were involved, were all bounded by the dates of Louis's birth and death: 1638-1715. It would have been careless and procrustean to have called them "Women of the 17th Century." Wherever they lived, they did indeed flourish or fade in response to "the far-spreading raw of the Sun King'

"An international pest" was Winston Chur chill's brusque assessment of this grand mon-arch. Churchill had little patience with those French leaders of any century, even if brave allies, who exemplified the Gallic code of gloire, which to Anglo-Saxons often seems to be patriotism without perspective, pride without proportion. Louis XIV is the incarnation of gloire and though Auchincloss concedes the grandoise artistic glories of that reign, he condemns what he describes, perhaps unfairly, as the primary component of gloire: "the thrill of trampling on one's oeighbors for the pleasure of trampling." Louis's purpose was not to wade in blood, of course (he was not a barbarian). but to have others under his elegant, high scarlet beel.

Auchincloss says of Louis: "He might have raised his hat gallantly to a chambermaid, but be did not regard women as having a role to be noted in the serious business of life. The strides that women made towards emancipation in his reign were with no help from him."

Alas, the "strides that women made towards emancipation in his reign" vastly overstates the case. Every woman depicted here is titled even the two nuns are abbesses - and most are queens. High rank and wealth usually bberaic those who possess them, male or female, but even the most powerful queens — Cleopam Elizabeth I and Victoria —did little to raise the status of their female subjects. Moreover, while a few of the women are remarkable for their wisdom, wit, charm or will (almost all of these are French except for the spectacular Sarah Churchill), the majority, like Mary II. Anne and Mary of Modena, would have no place if history but for the ranks they inherited of married. The great talent of Abigail Hill (heros ine of a 1983 novel "Exit Lady Masham" by this same prolific author) seems to be that she was a skilled masseuse. Fame was thrust of many. Queen Anne, a Niobe of 17 dead child dren, found her position a sacred duty but heavy burden. Finally, in almost any centu one could find a dozen or so women who high birth and vitality "emancipated."

While the False Dawn thesis is thus unconvincing, this is not important to the book since all these lives are interesting and recounted with urbanity. With generosity and affection as well — although Auchincloss finds Madame de Montespan ruthless, Mary II disappointing and Sarah Churchill exasperating, he concedes their verve and glamour; he shows Queen Anne and Lady Masham and Madame de Lafayette as unexciting, but he conveys their goodness. Moreover, as the ferminist theme falters, another emerges that is equally important and relevant to our time: the contrast between those determined to achieve gloire, political or personal, who are usually gifted and arrogant, and those others who are less egocentric and who are concerned with promoting peace and sta-

LANGUAGE The Secret Plan

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — A deli-cious, sinister phrase has been an early centerpiece of the Democratic campaign against Ronald Reagan: The president is charged with harboring a secret plan to raise taxes after the election.

Walter Moodale has already frankly asserted that he would raise taxes to lower the deficit, while laying the secret-plan bait in two punchy sentences in his acceptance speech: "He won't tell you. I just

The president promptly stepped into the trap, by insisting he had "no plans" to raise taxes. In manspeak, the signal-ridden language of pressrooms, the phrase no plans is a term of art meaning "not ready for announcement yet." (A calibration further, no present it Monday.")

The no-plans response enabled the Democrats to blaze away with the charge that the president had a secret plan to raise taxes. In retreat, Reagan finally had to say he could "never say never" (and the originator of that great presidential axiom remains unknown), but be would raise taxes only as "a last resort."

The secret-plan ploy had worked gain. Cartoonist Wayne Stayskal of The Tampa Tribune showed a pollster at a doorway being told by a bousewife: "I'm a registered Democrat ... but I've got a secret plan to vote Republican!

Mondale was ready with his secret secret-plan plan, because be had been on the receiving end of the charge this spring. Senator John Glenn, stamming his primary opponent's undue caution, said, "To be so cautious that your plat-form consists of secret plans to be revealed after the elections --- to be that cautious is not leadership, it's politics." The New York Times headline over the story zeroed in on the catch phrase: "Glenn Says Rival Has 'Secret Plans,"

These happy band-me-downs made me smile, because I was writing speeches for Richard Nixon in the spring of 1968 when the phrase was first used as a political charge. In a speech about Vietnam, the candidate for the Republican nomination pledged to "end the war and win the peace in the Pacific." Supporters of George Ronney, who was the Rockefeller stalkinghorse in the New Hampshire primary, promptly elevated that vague Nixon promise to a "plan" and demanded more details. In the Nixon camp, we knew there was no plan; some specific ideas for negotiation were scheduled for delivery in a speech on March 31, 1968, but that speech was scrubbed when President Johnson announced his retirement that night.

Romney kept hammering away, "Where is your secret plan?" Within a week, a false quotatioo had been manufactured: Nixon was widely quoted as having said. "I have a secret plan to end the war." Such a statement would have been, on its face, nonsense for any political figure to say, but many newspapers ran it as gospel. Nixon never

Years later, in the White House, the Nixon speechwriters would see the false quotation surface in some column; we took delight in writing the columnist: "We're trying to find the origin of that remark. Do you happen to have the clip?" This straight-faced query led to red-faced embarrassment, which satisfied some of our mediaphobia.

Today, the secret-plan charge has become part of many artful campaigns. It is a means of attacking a generality-peddling politician for oot being specific enough; if and when the opposition promiser is suckered into revealing a plan, the attacker then says, "See? We smoked him out," and blazes away at the specifics of the newly re-vealed (and usually newly created)

Credit belongs to Romney, who was laid low by his use of brain-washed. Who remembers the firestorm over brainwashed any more? Nobody; yet secret plan, little re-marked at the time, has found its place in the art of invidious inveighing.

Modigliani Heads Fakes, Art Expert Contends

ROME — An art expert was reported Sunday as saying that sculptured beads, reputedly by Amedoo Modigliani, may he fakes. Teen-agers claimed last week that they had faked one of the works found in a canal in Legorn, Italy. 'The Roar' of Broadway Past

By Martin Gottlieb New York Times Service

New York — The time was about two bells — that is, 2 A.M. in the street vernacular of the day — on an average morning in what Walter Winchell later referred to as the Oh-So-Long-

The place was the original Lindy's Restaurant, near 50th Street, the undisputed spiritual hub of that improbable stretch of Broadway that insiders called the Stem and outsiders the Great White Way. It was an unexceptional morning, as Sid Garfield, a show business press agent, recalls. Not much happened other than a lot of conversation, commonly referred to as schmoozing. But the identity of the schmoozers was what made Broadway Broadway - an erstwhile magic that the new efforts to rebuild Times Square may find difficult to capture again.

Holding court at one table, Garfield remembers, was Jack Benny. At a table behind him was Babe Ruth. At a third table, J. Edgar Hoover.

Because of the hour, the tens of thousands of light bulbs that bathed night-time Broadway in its unearthly white glow had already been dimmed.

The boisterous din that once led Dames Broadway and the street of the boisterous din that once led Dames Broadway and the street of the boisterous din that once led Dames Broadway and the street of the boisterous din that once led Dames Broadway and the street of the boisterous din that once led Dames Broadway are street. mon Runyon to pull a oewspaper crony aside and implore him to "listen to the roar" had quieted.

Final curtains had come down hours before on the musicals that were transforming popular American theater, on the plays turned out regularly by Eugene O'Neill and Maxwell Anderson, and on the vaudeville reviews featuring Al Jolson, Eddie Cantor and an array of what Walter Winchell labeled Main Stem

But at Lindy's the beat went on, re-plenished by big band musicians who settled over scrambled eggs and coffee after an evening's work, and by welldressed, somewhat sullen gangsters such as Arnold Rothstein, of whom The New York American wrote, "A hist for risk vibrated in every corpuscle of his blood, but he harnessed his emotions with nerves of steel wire."

Far removed in time and texture from this era - which blossomed after World War I and all but died by the end of the 1950s — is the $1.6-billion redevelopment plan proposed by the city and the state for Times Square.

Yet many of the debates about the plan have centered on the spirit of those times and whether it will be buried or resuscitated by the office towers, theater restorations and other major construction efforts proposed.

The sentiment for days long gone does not surprise many of the people who spent chunks of their careers in the old Times Square.

Morey Amsterdam spoke about it the other day, over an appetizer that he described as "fried cholesterol," at the Carnegie Delicatessen on Seventh Avenue.

"The minute you tag the name Broadway on anything, it's a tremendous success—there's something magic about it, a sparkle," he said. "People don't think of it as it is today."

it as it is today." For decades there have been calls in New York not to replace Times Square but somehow to bring back what once

At a news conference last mooth, Wil-liam J. Stern, the chairman of the State Urban Development Corporation, touted the plan by saying. "This project will help to bring back the days of George M. Cohan when Broadway was truly the Great White Way."

Critics argue, however, that the plan would turn a once great and, however tawdry, still electric street into another high-rise business district.

The plan calls for four huge office towers, a 2.4 million-square-foot (220,000-square-meter) merchandise mart, a 550-room hotel and the restoration of seven theaters on 42d Street be-tween Seventh and Eighth Avenues that once housed such productions as the Ziegfeld Follies and "Abie's Irish Rose" and are now flashy, cut-rate movie the-aters, many showing films with explicit sex or violence.

What this new plan does is ratify the last generation of changes in Manhattan, said Richard C. Wade, professor of urban history at the City University Graduate Center.

Wade, who has endorsed the plan with a few disclaimers, said: "Nostalgia's fine, but higher-scale development has already gone so far that you can't recapture the old era. Times Square will change inevitably and historically anyway — and what is good about this is that at least somebody's thought about planning the Brendan Gill, theater critic of The New Yorker magazine and a leader of the New York Landmarks Conservancy, has emerged as one of the most outspoken critics of the plan.

"It is totally anti-urban and elitist in its nature," he said. "They want to get rid of the look and smell of 42d Street between Seventh and Eighth Avenues because it represents what they regard as the ene-

There was always sex, there was always filth, there was always a lowering of moral standards. And there always has been joy. At its height, this joy came out of a time that Westbrook Pegler once defined as an era of "wonderful nonsense." Through the theater district and a scattering of outposts, this spirit continues to touch Broadway, however faintly, and through a legacy of bright lights, style, artistic significance and myth it continnes to leave impressions on American versity, "a multiplicity of dialogues" gushing from speakeasies and legitimate theaters, from the Metropolitan Opera House and Madison Square Garden, from hangouts and haberdasheries featuring clothing that partisans still refer to as "sharp," from the pens of Robert Sherwood, Cole Porter, George S. Kaufman as well as from those of Winchell and other oewspapermen. From his penthouse at the old Forrest Hotel on 49th Street, Runyon used to watch the spectacle and fancy what at once was both its darkest and most Falstaffian side.

Across 8th Avenue was the old Garden. Across Broadway, Lindy's. Across 49th Street were the Brill Building — Tin Pan Alley — and the ticket office of Mike Jacobs, a prominent fight promoter. After stops at Lindy's and such speak-easies as the Furnace Club on 52d Street, he would do some schmoozing at the beach, stop off in the lobby of the Forrest to chat with its varied denizens, and retire to his one-bedroom penthouse where, beginning in 1929, he melded these conversations into what one of his biographers, Edwin P. Hoyt, called "the social history of Broadway.

"Everybody enjoyed him at the time," Manny Manishor, now 87 years old, a veteran Broadway oddsmaker who owned the Furnace Club, recalled recent-ly at Gallagher's. "Not only among us, but among people who read."

Dressed in a dapper chalk-stripe suit and looking 25 years younger than his age, Manishor, who became "Manny Mannheimer" in Runyon's stories, paid the author his highest compliment: "He was a gentleman at all times. I never heard him raise his voice to anybody."

Much as in the old days, Manishor's compatriots at the bar included three of the city's best homicide detectives and at least one venerable journalist.

For all this, Manishor concluded, he would "rather be in Oshkosh" now.

"There's nothing happening," he ex-plained. "There are oo characters, no Sleepout Louie, oo Alabama, no Blonde "Broadway reads better than it lives," Runyon once said, and its gradual disintegratioo was particularly painful to many New Yorkers.

Runyon himself, after 36 years of chain smoking and drinking 60 cups of coffee a day, died of throat cancer in 1946. His ashes, according to his will, were scattered over Broadway from an anisolate.
